University of Wyoming sorority members who sued the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority for allowing a transgender man to live in an all girls house, set to have their case argued in a U.S. appeals court in Denver today.

6 members of the sorority house will have their case heard in court after a Wyoming judge last year dismissed a lawsuit filed on their behalf- with the judge ruling that a court could not override how a private organization defines what a woman is.

In the original lawsuit, the girls allege Transgender student Artemis Langford made them feel uncomfortable, regularly stared at them as they undressed and exhibited signs of visible arousal.

While the appeal does not mention Langford by name, it argues that sorority leaders have ignored sorority bylaws that they contend shouldn't allow transgender men to be members.

The democrat judge dismissed the first round because he (the judge) couldn't define "woman". 🤔 We don't live in a serious society anymore. Clownery all around.

If they are going to allow them in, it needs to be post penis removal. All of these trans dress and act like trashy women with their mimicking, yet none of them seem to want to part with their penis.

Oh, thank you!

And yet the original case got dismissed. Solely because some of the girls were advocating for him and pressuring other girls to not vote him out. With girls being so scared of what others think it's very common for them to be pushed to agree with this stuff when not all of them

I told my daughter she could not join this sorority when she rushed. It was at a different university but I don't care. If the national org allows this at any chapter then that is not organization my family will join or financially support. Sororities are for young REAL women.

That transgender is not even making an effort. What made them decide to let him in, is he related to one of them?

If he claims to be a Trans woman, and still "likes" real women, does that make him a Trans Lesbian? Asking for a friend.

Private organisations have to obeyed the law so surely the judge can over ride and enforce the law theses girls have rights the same as any other person to feel safe while at the university and in their sorority house

Funny we don't see stories about girls running away from sororities why is this behavior accepted when it's so common?

The easy way to handle it is for all the actual women to leave. They'll keep catering to the small percentage of extremes as long as normal folks sit idly by.

I hope they win their case and this man is sent packing.

These women are brave.
I hope their good example catches on, and inspires other women and girls, to fight for safe places, where men are not allowed.
